David,

I analyzed your case. I am going for a 'tolling' of the run of the statute during your active duty deployment and hopeful the time would work out for a waiver.

Deployments notwithstanding, figuring the dates from the time you graduated from the academy and the months prior to deployment and the months since you've returned comes out to 66 months. If the regulation is 'tolled' for that particular situation, you will still have time to take the requalification course prior to hitting the 72 month deadline before you have to take the academy all over again. I've got some legal beagles looking at this thing and am still waiting for my answer. I will ping them again and ask that they get me an answer on this, one way or the other. You've only got 6 more months before you have to take the academy again if I'm right on my theory. If I'm wrong, you're going to be stuck with having to re-do the academy.

When I know, so will you. ASAP.

Thanks,

Don
